SONG. AIR-" Young Lochinvar."

Now list, brother sailors, land lubbers and all, I'll sing ye what tickles the great and the small-About the next skipper, our Hal of the West; His compass ne'er varies, his chart is the best.

His bright eagle eye detects mischief afar; He glories in peace, and he quails not in war; He'll bring out the ship from the shoals and the fogs, Though her lockers are rifled and gone to the dogs.

Jist ax an old salt, as he plough's o'er the deep, And spins his long yarns, then turns in to sleep, Why he dreams of no leeshores and storms to o'er whelm?

"Why 'case we've a thorough-bred sailor at helm."

So the good old Columbia to Hal we'll confide, Midst breakers and quicksands on every side; E'er Charybdis' false glare may allure us too nigh, Or on sharp rocks of Scylla we're thrown high and

But yet to the swift is not always the race; They say all the donkeys will join in the chase; What a bustling and justling, what scampering there'll be!

And I'll be the marshal, if I'm there to see.

Now go it, sly REYNARD, more wily than fleet, But you must, like your cousin, add wings to you

Here VETO moves slow, for he carries a weight; Throw Texas away, dear, or you'll be too late.

Now speeds honest Lew-he's a travelling man, He took the grand tour at nine thousand per ann.; Now, GENERAL, fall in, and for once join the fun, You're first rate at fighting, and now you must run.

Here's South, 'live and kicking, and not nullified; He has been through his training-his speed shall be

The Colonel, too, harnessed! you'll find it no go; But send on your mint drops, whatever you do.

Here's Tecumsen, all patriot up to the brim-He'll play first or second, 'tis all one to him. The MAN OF THE NORTH, too, will make eight or ten, And if he's no hon, he has been in the den.

Now go it, ye cripples! put in all ye know; If you can't catch the whirlwind, ye are vastly too

And the knell is prepared for your fleetest and best-"Afar off they follow," says Hal of the West! N.

MILTON.

A SKETCH, BY T. B. MACAULEY.

Milton was, like Dante, a statesman and a lover; and like Dante, he had been unfortunate in ambition and in love. He had survived his health and his sight, the comforts of his home, and the prosperity of his party. Of the great men, by whom he had been distinguished at his entrance into life, some had been taken away from the evil to come; some had carried into foreign climates their unconquerable hatred of oppression; some were pining in dungeons; and some had poured forth their blood on scaffolds. That hateful proscription, facetiously termed the Act of Indemnity and Oblivion, had set a mark on the poor, blind, deserted poet, and held him up by name to the deserted poet, and held him up by name to the hatred of a profligate court and inconstant people! Venal and licentious scribblers, with just suffici-ent talent to clothe the thoughts of a pander in the style of a bellman, were now the favorite writers of the sovereign and the public. It was a loath-some herd—which could be compared to nothing so fitly as to the rabble of Comus, grotesque mon sters, half beastial, half human, dropping with wine, bloated with gluttony, and reeling in obscene dances. Amidst these his Muse was placed, like the chaste lady of the Masque, lofty, spotless and serene-to be chatted at by the whole rabble of Satyrs and Goblins. If ever despondency and asperity could be excused in any man, it might have been excused in Milton. But the strength of his mind overcame every calamity. Neither blindness, nor gout, nor age, nor penury, nor do-mestic afflictions, nor political disappointments, nor abuse, nor proscription, nor neglect, had power to disturb his sedate and majestic patience. His spirits do not seem to have been high, but they were singularly equable. His temper was serious perhaps stern; but it was a temper which no suf-ferings could render sullen or fretful. Such as it when, on the eve of great events, he returned from his travels, in the prime of health and manly beauty, loaded with literary distinctions and glowing with patriotic hopes, such it continued to be when, after having experienced every calamity which is incident to our nature, old, poor, sightless and disgraced, he retired to his hovel to die!

Hence it was, that though he wrote the Para-dise Lost at a time of life when images of beauty and tenderness are in general beginning to fade, even from those minds in which they have not been effaced by anxiety and disappointment, he adorned it with all that is most lovely and delightful in the physical and in the moral world. Neither Theocritus nor Ariosto had a finer or a more healthful sense of the pleasantness of external objects, or loved better to luxuriate amidst sunbeams and flowers, the songs of nightingales, the juice of summer fruits, and the coolness of shady fountains. His conception of love unites all the voluptuousness of the Oriental harem, and all the present communicates of this territory to our played on them are in a played and a present process are a rather for the present communicates of the present communicat

the gallantry of the chivalric tournament, with all the quiet affection of an English fireside. Hip poetry reminds us of the miracles of Alpine scenery. Nooks and dells, beautiful as fairyland, are embo-omed in its most rugged and gigantic elevations. The roses and myrtles bloom unchilled on the verge of the avalanche.

Traces, indeed, of the peculiar character of Milton may be found in all his works; but it is most strongly displayed in the Sonnets. Those most strongly displayed in the Sonnets. Those remarkable poems have been undervalued by critics, who have not understood their nature. They have no epigrammatic point. Their is none of the ingenuity of Filicaji in the thought, none of the hard and brilliant enamel of Petrarch in the style. They are simple but majestic records of the feelings of the poet; as little tricked out for the public eye as his diary would have been. A victory, an unexpected attack upon the city. victory, an unexpected attack upon the city, a momentary fit of depression or exultation, a jest thrown out against one of his books, a dream, which for a short time restored to him that beauwhich for a short time restored to find face over which the grave had closed forever, led him to musings which, without effort, shaped themselves into verse. The unity of sentiment themselves into verse. The unity of sentiment and severity of style, which characterize these pieces, remind us of the Greek Anthology, or perhaps still more of the Collects of the English Liturgy—the noble poem on the Massacres of Piedmont is strictly a collect in verse.

mont is strictly a collect in verse.

The Sonnets are more or less striking, according as the occasion which gave birth to them are more or less interesting. But they are, almost without exception, dignified by a sobriety and greatness of mind to which we know not where to look for a parallel. It would indeed be scarcely safe to draw any decided inferences, as to the character of a writer, from passages directly egotistical. But the qualities which we have ascribed to Milton, though perhaps most strongly bed to Milton, though perhaps most strongly marked in those parts of his works which treat of his personal feelings, are distinguishable in every page, and impart to all his writings, prose, and poetry, English, Latin, and Italian, a strong fami-
